Loop

Il percorso parte da Tambre, si snoda sui pascoli del Cansiglio e collega sei dei più belli cippi di epoca veneziana ritrovati. Si tratta dei massi che costituivano il confine mantenuto dalla Repubblica di Venezia per oltre 250 anni- a partire dall'anno 1548 - a protezione delle foreste che non potevano essere sfruttate dai residenti, ma erano rigorosamente riservate alle necessità dell'arsenale di Venezia.

In 1548 a rule by the Serenissima Repubblica of Venezia imposed the total ban to utilize the forest for the necessities of the inhabitants of the surroundings which meant a ban from pasturing and utilizing the wood. The borders demarcation was done using huge immovable and inalienable rocks already existing in the land. From Sant'Anna or Tambre, to the Malghe and the Cansiglio woods to find the ancient boundary stones that Venice used for 250 years. There are more than 300 already detected around the forest and inside, 15 of these are in the municipal territory of Tambre and 6 have been joined by an ideal path to make you spend half a day immersed in nature and history. The route is of medium difficulty, just over 15 km long with a difference in height of 770 m and a journey time of about 5 hours. After the fall of Venice these rocks were abandoned for centuries to the weather conditions, today these witnesses set the idea of the power that once Venice had on the forest lands that was used as a resource for the necessities of the Arsenal. An ideal route among six of these rocks in the area of Tambre will let you spend half a day in a diverse and interesting path between history and nature.
